BILL MAY AUTHORIZE HOMESCHOOLERS TO SELECTIVELY ATTEND PUBLIC SCHOOL Creative Tutors 4 Kids Supports Bill and Offers Tutoring to Fill Gaps

McKinney, Texas (May 7, 2005) Home schooled students may soon have the opportunity to attend public school for the classes and extracurricular activities they choose. Rep. Brian McCall, R-Plano, has introduced a bill that would allow home schooled students access to public school classes. If the bill is passed, extracurricular activities like team sports and specialized subjects like chemistry would become available to home schooled students. That access provides enrichment opportunities that were previously only available to public school students.

Creative Tutors 4 Kids founder, Jan Van Blarcum, supports the bill. "This bill enhances home schooled students' learning opportunities. It opens the door to enriching challenges and gives them access to a wide range of teaching styles. Creative Tutors 4 Kids was founded on the principle that most students excel when instruction is customized to the student's learning style. Our experienced tutors provide that service to our students and specialize in subject areas taught in public schools."

"This opportunity to experience the unfamiliar brings a challenge. Home schooled students may need extra help adjusting to public school work. They may lack the educational foundation in a subject or be unfamiliar with the teaching format. Tutoring can fill the gap during this adjustment period. Our tutors, who are matched with students based upon academic needs and learning style, can provide powerful support. Even gifted and talented students benefit from instruction customized to their learning style."

Creative Tutors 4 Kids optimizes the tutoring experience because it matches students with tutors who specialize in that student's academic needs and learning style. Another benefit is that the tutor comes to the student. Whether tutoring is done at the child's home or at a practice gym for a child focusing on athletics, parents are relieved of the burden of transporting the child to another location.

Creative Tutors 4 Kids McKinney is the McKinney franchise of Creative Tutors 4 Kids International, Inc. The company's mission is to help kids reach their full potential and become self-confident adults. A child who succeeds at school, becomes a better future employee, politician, or community service volunteer.
